One of the pioneers of 24-hour television news reporting and a CNN bureau chief for 12 years, Patricia Kelly now conducts media training courses for a variety of corporate and institutional clients and has particular expertise in crisis communications.

She provides one-on-one coaching and group training in television, radio and newspaper interview and appearance techniques. Using her extensive international experience of print and broadcast news gathering, production and management, Kelly also offers courses in written and oral communications developed specifically for individual clients as well as voiceover, video and copywriting services.